Adam Nicholas Phillips is CEO at Interfaith America, the nation's largest bridge-building organization with programming across campus, corporate, and civic spaces. With two decades of experience at the intersection of faith and public life, Adam previously served in the Biden-Harris Administration, leading Faith-based and Localization efforts at USAID, in both a development and diplomatic capacity. Working closely with the White House and Department of State, he oversaw development policy, non-traditional partnerships, and democracy initiatives in nearly 100 countries. An ordained minister, Adam has led congregations, directed faith mobilization at organizations like ONE and Bread for the World, and worked on political campaigns. Adam has been a TEDx speaker, with work featured in The Atlantic, CNN, Washington Post, NPR, Huffington Post, Relevant Magazine, and the Christian Broadcasting Network's 700 Club.
